New Research Projects and Partnerships

Pervasive M-learning within the context of the new research generation on Informatics and telecommunication

As the result of the long and fruitful cooperation between the “Università Telematica Guglielmo Marconi” of Rome, Italy and the “Université Mohamed V-Soussi” of Rabat, Morocco, the project MADAR was successfully approved and financed by the Moroccan Government last month. The project, whose title in original language is “M-Learning Pervasive dans le contexte Nouvelles Générations des Réseaux informatiques et Télécoms”, focuses on both formal and informal learning with particular reference to the development of Mobile and Pervasive learning in Morocco. The aim is to analyse the different aspects of the so-called M-learning and P-learning in order to promote their use and highlight the advantages they offer in terms of equal opportunity of access, ubiquitous connectivity and reduction of educational costs.

EL Gate - European - Latin American university cooperation

"EL Gate" is a 30-month project co-funded by the European Commission’s ALFA Programme. The ALFA Programme supports co-operation between European and Latin American higher education institutions. EL Gate aims at strengthening the management and governance of Latin American Universities in identifying and executing co-operation activities. In particular the project seeks to design an online course and a web-based Community of Practices in order to enhance academic managers’ competences to successfully supervise external contacts with foreign partners and participation in joint scientific and research projects. The partnership is led by the Italian Università Telematica “Guglielmo Marconi” and includes the following GUIDE members: Universidade do Vale do Rio dos Sinos, Brazil; Universidade Aberta, Portugal; Universidad del Salvador, Argentina; Fundacion Uvirtual, Bolivia; and Universidad Estatal a Distancia, Costa Rica.
GUIDE Participation in international events

GUIDE Association has supported the ICDE Standing Conference of President (SCOP) and the ODE Global Forum (18-21 October Shanghai TV University), two of the most important events for policy-level decision makers and the academic and institutional e-learning community from all over the world.

The ICDE International Council on Distance Education recognized by the United Nations (UNESCO) has promoted through the two events intercultural co-operation on items of relevance as the future of Open and Distance Education and the Building of the Learning City.

The presentation of case histories from different regions of the world has confirmed the need to move towards a creative and flexible use of digital technologies and quality standards distance education and lifelong learning systems. An important space in the debate was dedicated to the Shanghai TV University as an example of excellence in reaching the ambitious objective of building a new learning city, thanks to the use and integration of the most updated technological systems.

GUIDE Association and other international organizations like the Commonwealth of learning, the EADTU and the Asian Association of Open Universities (AAOU) had the task to report on the problems concerning the globalization process of higher education and to promote capacity building projects and quality standards for e-learning and distance education.

A short video clip of the conference has also been diffused on UNESCO website and you are welcome to visit http://portal.unesco.org/education/en/ev.php-URL_ID=57601&URL_DO=DO_TOPIC&URL_SECTION=201.html for details.

FormaMente - new issue

The new issue of FormaMente Journal, n. 3-4/2008, will be available for GUIDE members by the end of this year. The content of this new issue reflects and develops the research themes already established within the past issues, including also some new material related to the latest initiatives of the Association.

In particular, the articles published deal with topics such as the impact of Information Technologies on research, the Man-machine relationship and its cognitive consequences, the pedagogical paradigm for distance education, the evaluation of specific software for research, along with the discussion of the pros and cons of the use of open source tools to implement open educational resources.

Since the last International GUIDE Workshop, held in Rome in May 2008, focused on the relation between e-learning and multicultural education and inclusion, the new issue will dedicate special attention to the use of digital technologies in Developing Countries and to the fostering of cultural integration in education.

A few papers presented during the conference were selected and published; in particular: a general vision on the aforementioned problem is given by Prof. Steven Tötösy de Zepetnek, in New media technology, interculturalism, and intermediality, while the paper of Prof. Palmira Jucevičiene discusses the paradigm shift produced by the use of ICT in education in different Countries’ educational systems. The technical and pragmatic side of the problem is also faced and developed in Bridging the gap between academia and industry through user-centred training, by Prof. Yeong Tae Song, Sungchul Hong and Yuanqiong Wang as well as in the paper by Prof. Mohd Satar Nurhizam Safie on the Usage of OSS in multimedia courses: OUM experience.
